Address to Parents and the Public of Virginia.
The undersigned have been appointed by the "Educational Association of Virginia," a committee to address you on their behalf, "urging you to a more hearty co-operation with teachers in matters of instruction, discipline," &c.

The benefits which would be secured to education and the aid which would be afforded teachers by such co-operation would be very great; as all who have any experience on the subject must be aware of the obstacles at the very threshold of education arising from the want of proper family management. If, therefore, they can be removed, much good will be attained. Since the teacher is properly to be regarded as the parent's agent, to assist in the training of his children, it appears obvious that parents may be best induced to this important training by pointing them to the fundamental principles to be observed in the education of youth.

In its broad, comprehensive sense, education embraces the physical, moral, and intellectual instruction of a child, from infancy to manhood. Any system is imperfect which does not combine them all, and that is best which, while it thoroughly develops them, abases the coarse, animal affections of human nature, and exalts the higher faculties and feelings. A child has everything to learn, and is more readily taught by having before it good examples to imitate, than by simple precepts. He should, therefore, be encouraged to associate with his parents; for his heart must be affected, his feelings moved, as well as his mind expanded. He may be taught that it is criminal to steal, and sinful to lie, and yet be unable to apply this knowledge to the government of himself; and it will therefore be of no value to him unless the principle is confirmed into a habit.

Obedience is the first requisite in family training. It should be made sincere and perfect, and to proceed as much from affection as from a conviction of its necessity. To accomplish this, great prudence and the exercise of much patience are necessary. By firmness mixed with kindness the child will learn, by repeated experience, that he is not to follow his first impulse, and that self-control, which even an infant can understand, is necessary to his comfort. Neither violence nor harshness should ever be used; and the parent must bear constantly in mind that to govern his child he must show him that he can control himself. One of the most common errors in management of children is irregularity of behavior towards them. They are as skillful, as pernicious in their attempts to gratify their self-will; at one time trying to evade authority, at another to oppose it. If they once succeed, they are encouraged to persevere, and it is necessary for the parent to meet the first attempt with firmness, and not permit himself to be baffled by evasion or resistance. Although a child may not yield to threats, and may defy punishment, he cannot resist patient kindness and gentle admonition.

The love of truth is equal in importance to habitual obedience. Every encouragement, even to the pardoning of offences, should be given to its cultivation. The first impulse of the mind in children is always to speak the truth rather than falsehood, unless some evil motive arise to sway them to untruth. They should be accustomed to bear the truth always spoken. Confession of error, with a detestation of falsehood, dishonesty, and equivocation should be sedulously inculcated. A strict adherence to promises made to them is of the utmost importance, as well as the removal of all temptation to misconduct.

The influences of Christianity form the essential element of moral character, as its principles are the only sufficient basis of virtue or happiness. Hence the parent's most sacred duty to his child is to impress the sentiments of our holy religion early upon his mind by personal explanation and systematic instruction. As the intellect expands, its sacred truths will be comprehended and felt, and its motives and principles be strengthened and confirmed by practice and habit.

An essential part of the education of youth is to teach them the fact that nothing good can be acquired in this world without labor; and that the very necessities and comforts of life must be procured by earnest and regular exertion. They should also be taught to know that, after having been reared and educated by their parents, they should not expect them to provide further for them, and that their future subsistence and advancement must depend upon themselves. Parents sometimes commit the mistake of allowing their children, after having reached the period of life when they ought to be engaged in making a livelihood, to rely upon them for support. This encourages them in injurious idleness, and destroys their spirit of self-dependence, which is necessary for their advancement in life, and causes them to appear so unreasonable as to depend upon them after having arrived at an age when they should think and act for themselves.

The choice of a profession is not of so much consequence as the manner in which it is pursued. If habits of self-control and self-denial have been acquired during the season of education, the great object has been accomplished. Diligence and integrity in any useful pursuit of life will be sure to secure prosperity and fame, and success will result from engaging in that business in which the generality of mankind are interested.

Such being the correct view of education, the support and co-operation which faithful teachers should receive from parents can be easily inferred by the good sense of each one. We only ask especial attention, in concluding, to the following suggestions, which our experience has shown to be of prime importance.

1. The parent, after committing his child to the teaching of another, should continue to manifest an affectionate interest in his improvement by constant inquiry and encouragement.
2. The supplying of young persons, while absent from their homes, with needless money, and the permission to contract debts, are to be reprobated, as tempting to a sinful prodigality and multiplying the dangers of contracting habits of vice.
3. The proper authority of teachers must be firmly sustained by parents.

4. Every young person should be informed by his parents that he must give diligence to profit by his studies, or else must be compelled to make himself useful to society by actual labor in some humble sphere.
And last; an unworthy parent cannot reasonably expect the teacher, against the current of his wrong example, to form his son into a worthy man.
